

"A smart, very funny first show.
I can't wait to see his second."

Sarah Millican

In the summer of 2010, Andrew Collins turned Secret Dancing, his technique for covert physical expression on public transport, into a one-hour, one-man comedy show for the Edinburgh Fringe. After some warm-ups in Brighton, London and Northampton, he performed the show 16 times as part of PBH's Free Fringe in Edinburgh. It was a happy experience, earning him a number of "solid" three-star reviews, but it taught him that stand-up is not something you can dabble in lightly, so he retired while his dignity and health were still intact. On 3 November, 2010, Cardiff's Masonic Hall staged the final performance of Secret Dancing. It went on a bit longer than one hour. This is it.
